

Patrizia and Sergio Falcelli residents of Monza, Italy (pictured here on vacation in New Orleans, April, 2010), translators.

A graduate in electrical engineering at the University of Bologna, Sergio Falcelli worked at some primary Italian companies as project manager in the field of system automation and visited the United States to study computer maintenance at several locations while here. After retirement he continued to work as consultant, and then as teacher of mathematics and computer science in a private school.

Patrizia Bizzocchi Falcelli graduated in ancient literature at the University of Bologna, and then took a law degree at the University of Milan. She taught Italian literature and Latin language and literature in a public high school (Liceo scientifico). Now, after retirement, she continues to teach Italian literature and ancient Greek language and literature in a private school.

Together, they translated this essay on the Unification of Italy so that Patrizia Falcelli could use parts of it in her classes in Monza, Italy.

We are grateful to them both for their excellent work on this project.
